MADRID, Aug 3 — Reinforcements to be sent to Cuba ... September for Cuba. The amnesty proclamation has been postponed.

ST PETERSBURG, Aug 3 — A Russian flag has sailed from Cronstadt to cruise in the Baltic.

LONDON, Aug 3 — Advices from private sources attribute the delay in the opening of the campaign after the armies were ready on both sides to a renewal of Napoleon's proposal for peace, which was formally refused by Bismarck. The Government is preparing an answer to the last dispatch of Bismarck. The Crown Prince Frederick William remains in Prussia in command of the Prussian troops and will not take command of the South German armies as reported.

WYOMING

CHEYENNE, Aug 4 — The Yale College scientific expedition with Prof Marsh left here to-day to make geological surveys of the country between the forks of the Platte river. A detachment of the 5th cavalry under command of Capt Montgomery goes as an escort to the expedition.

UTAH

OGDEN, Aug 4 — The U P R R officials arrived here yesterday for the purpose of consulting with the C P R R officials relative to the location of the junction at a point about five miles west of Ogden. The representatives of the latter company have not arrived yet.

INTERIOR CALIFORNIA DISPATCHES

SANTA CRUZ, Aug 4 — A shock of earthquake visited this place at 1 o'clock this morning. The shock was generally felt and was of sufficient violence to arouse people from sleep.

LOS ANGELES, Aug 4 — Reports say that large numbers of cattle in the grazing parts of this county are dying of murrain. The proposed new county road will shorten the traveling distance between Los Angeles and San Buena Ventura [illegible] miles. Rumor is busy with railroad schemes said to be on foot. No definite propositions have been made by the parties interested.

YREKA, August 4 — Word has just been received here from Scott's bar that Hon William Shores, representative to the last Assembly from this county, was found yesterday by some Indians on his ditch three or four miles from Scott's bar, with his foot cut nearly off and bleeding profusely. He was so exhausted that he died before reaching his house. It is supposed that while he was chopping a log the ax glanced and struck his foot. Uncle Billy, as he was familiarly known, was an old pioneer of this county, widely known and a most estimable citizen. His death will be mourned by a large circle of friends. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity and aged about 60 years.

STOCKTON, August 4 — John Jones, a laborer on a ranch 20 miles from this city, was prostrated by sunstroke to-day. It will probably result fatally.

Giovanni Fanjacca was examined in the County Court to-day and pronounced insane. He will be conveyed to the Asylum.

The well for the new water works has now reached a depth of 215 feet. The supply of water is said to be unlimited.

The Heroes of Bull Run

The New York Evening Post speaks of the heroes of Bull Run as follows:

Nine years ago to-day was fought the battle of Bull Run. [illegible] recalling the fact [illegible] the great change that [illegible] in the [illegible] of the country [illegible] that of all the [illegible] still [illegible] ignored [illegible] but two or three that survive [illegible] now take any part in public affairs.

General Irvin McDowell, who commanded the Union forces, remains still in the army of the United States. General Sherman, who led a brigade of Tyler's division, is Commander in Chief at Washington, and General Burnside, who in the earlier part of the engagement was in the van, is now Governor of Rhode Island.

General Tyler, commander of the first division, whose baptismal name strangely enough is given as Daniel by one historian of the war and as Robert O by another, is in Connecticut in the prosecution of [illegible] business enterprises.

General David Hunter, who commanded the second division and who never showed [illegible] himself more gallantly than on that day, lives in retirement in Washington.

General S P Heintzelman, the third division commander, is on half pay after forty four years service, is president of a New York insurance company and lives at [illegible] in New Jersey.

General Theodore Runyon, commanding the fourth division, is out of service and lives in Newark.

Col D S Miles, who led the fifth division, it will be recollected, [illegible] at the [illegible] of Harper's Ferry, and was killed upon the spot.

Of Gen Sherman's comrades as brigade commanders in Tyler's division, Gen Keyes is now a Colonel in the regular army, Gen Schenck is in Congress, and Richardson was [illegible] killed in battle.

Of the brigade commanders of Heintzelman, Gen Franklin is at [illegible] at Hartford, Conn. [illegible] be [illegible] Freedmen [illegible] General Wilcox after serving to the end of the war and [illegible] participating in the [illegible] was killed [illegible] of the [illegible] court room in the Capitol at Richmond.

Gen Patterson of Pennsylvania [illegible] Johnston [illegible] escape [illegible] his native State.

General [illegible] who rode over the field after the battle had been won is the [illegible] Jefferson Davis [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Jubilee [illegible] Virginia [illegible] than [illegible]

The Philadelphia North [illegible] the [illegible] as a very serious as a large part of [illegible] to the German ports [illegible] though it is true we can now ship [illegible] to Holland and Bel[gium] at the expense of the [illegible] operation will operate against [illegible] and it is altogether uncertain how long the neutrality of the low countries may continue.

CURRENT NOTES

New Hampshire takes the premium for early marriages. The census there shows that a woman aged [illegible] has been 24 years of age.

Chicago, wicked as she is generally believed to be, has only fourteen hundred liquor saloons to her 300,000 population, while San Francisco with [illegible] people has fourteen hundred and seventy saloons.

The New York Herald is claimed to be worth [illegible] the Tribune $1,100,000, the Times $1 [illegible] the Journal of Commerce $500,000 [illegible]

It [illegible] of the [illegible] expected in the [illegible] negro suffrage was carried by a majority of [illegible] than 3,000 votes were cast against the negro suffrage clause of the new constitution [illegible]

It is reported that Wilbur F Storey of the Chicago Times, has been trying to buy the New York World. It is reported that he offered at first $200,000 and finally $300,000 for the paper, but that Marble demanded $ [illegible] 000 for half of it. Storey wanted all or none and so the matter terminated.

The alarming increase in the practice of abortion in New York and the systematic manner in which infants are disposed of has given rise to the organization of a "Society for the Suppression of Infanticide." They will watch the papers and bring before the Courts the parties who regularly advertise these practices under the flimsiest disguises.

The Chicago grain dealers have their annual trouble again about hot grain. The Grain Inspector had posted on the bulletin boards warnings that in two of the principal elevators the grain was getting out of condition [illegible] warm on top of the bins etc. It is remarkable that the trouble is traced to the very hot and sultry weather. The grain most affected was No 2 spring wheat. We never hear of grain heating in Oregon.

Chicago is preparing for not so good a show in the census tables as have been predicted. The Tribune says: "We remember that, when the census of 1860 was being taken, almost every one here thought the population of Chicago would exceed 150,000, but it only reached 109,000, and great was the disappointment thereat. Everybody is now estimating it at 300,000, but they may be subjected to another disappointment."

The Boston Traveller undertakes to explain the cause which led to the recall of Mr Motley as American Minister to England. That journal is authoritatively assured that the recall of Mr Motley was the result of the incompatibility of his views [illegible] the [illegible] question with those of the Administration. According to the authority referred to, the Minister in his dispatches followed strictly the instructions of the Administration, but was so injudicious as to let it become known [illegible] London society that the dispatches did not represent his own personal views.

Ex Confederate General Slaughter has published a vindication of the Mexican President Juarez from the charge made before our Congressional Committee of Investigation into the smuggling business on the Rio Grande, to the effect that he (Juarez) was in league during the war with the Confederate agents engaged in importing arms and exporting cotton across the Mexican boundary. General Slaughter says he was Chief of Staff in the western district of Texas, this command embracing the entire frontier of the Rio [Grande], [illegible] that he had therefore the best opportunity of knowing the truth or falsity of the said charges, and does not hesitate in pronouncing them, so far as President Juarez is affected—as utterly destitute of any foundation in truth.

FOREIGN NOTES

The Federal Council of the North German Confederation have received with favor a proposal which is worthy of the attention of all maritime [nations]. The idea emanates from the old Hanse town of Bremen, and is to the effect that sailors, whether Germans or foreigners, who assist a North German vessel in distress shall be rewarded by the Confederation.

Prussia, with her great growing diversified industry, her literature, intelligence, wealth and military power, stands before the world to-day a proud monument to the immortal Frederick and his policy of union and protection, while Ireland, [illegible] poverty, misery and discontent, stands a great and unanswerable indictment against England and her selfish British free trade policy of preventing or destroying a diversified industry in that unhappy land.

A three ton of coal represent the labor power of a man for his lifetime, and England has availed herself of the use of this great agent to an extent equal to the power of 450,000 men; we have here the secret of her great wealth, as well as of her desire that the rest of mankind shall, by the adoption of British free trade, be prevented from availing themselves of the forces of nature and developing a diversified industry, and shall thus be hewers of wood and drawers of water for her and pour wealth into her lap.

The special correspondent of the New York Tribune writes from Berlin that Prince Frederick Charles is commanding the army of the Rhine. It is considered certain in Berlin that Napoleon is counting on the disloyalty of South Germany and had planned a sudden movement across the Rhine before Prussia could concentrate a considerable force, and is bitterly disappointed by the unanimity of all the German States, and he is certainly not going to risk a movement northward with a South German army on his flank. He has so timely delayed and perhaps altered his original plan of campaign. It is believed that no advance will now be made at any point without risking a general engagement. Prussia is, though not ready to attack, ready everywhere to defend.

The following is a portion of the special cable dispatch (July ?) to the New York Tribune in regard to the chances of success of the two com[batants]: [illegible] the first battle I believe the odds immensely in favor of France. For the last 12 days [illegible] has been massing her army on the frontier [illegible] two marches of Bitche and Sarreguemines. I have read of a certain number of battalions being sent forward and of others remaining behind but as far as I can judge the French are all evacuating every garrison [illegible] [illegible] 180,000 down as the lowest number the Emperor means to have under his hand, and in compact [illegible] at the entrance of the campaign. I believe the concentration now to be [illegible] completion. The number of guns will be large but they will not be adequate [illegible]. The cavalry also will not bear a high [illegible] probably under one tenth of the infantry. The whole of these troops are in a magnificent state of discipline and the officers are much more numerous than those of the Prussians. The French artillery was superior to the Austrian at [illegible] and the Austrian was superior to the Prussian at [illegible]. There is no doubt of the Chassepot being a better weapon than the Prussian arm. [illegible] the Prussians [illegible] concentration [illegible] at the opening of the campaign [illegible] without a battle the Prussians [illegible] behind the Rhine.

It [illegible] that [illegible] in the Eastern States which has killed off so many [illegible] by sunstroke seems to have been overlooked by the San Francisco papers as a text [illegible] in favor of that city. We have [illegible] that such mortality [illegible] San Francisco earthquakes [illegible] are but trifles after all. The metropolitan papers are evidently remiss in their duty. It is time this story was told again. — Marysville Appeal

Our Navy

[From the New York Times.]

It is to be regretted that Congress did not, before adjournment, adopt some measures calculated to increase the efficiency of the navy. The war between France and Prussia renders it important that our European, South Atlantic and other squadrons should be strengthened, but the number of sailors allowed is so small that no new ship can be placed in commission until some other [illegible]. The Guerriere, now lying at the Brooklyn yard, was ready to go to sea two or three months ago, but still cannot leave for want of a crew. For the same reason the [illegible] Squadron, which sails from Annapolis this year with the Naval Cadets, will go with [illegible] ships less than usual. It is [illegible] that the [illegible] report [illegible] Admiral Porter had asked for 18,000 men. He probably would have wanted eighteen hundred men and a suitable appropriation for equipment, construction, &c., as he would then have been enabled to send to sea six vessels of the Guerriere class, which would be enough to supply our present requirements. But the enlistment of these men and the expenditure necessary to fit out the required ships can only be authorized by Congress. We have good ships and experienced officers. Under ordinary circumstances there should be little difficulty in increasing our present naval force from eight thousand, its present number, to eleven thousand men.

Although during the rebellion we maintained a strict blockade at the Southern ports, and by the construction and use of monitors did so much to modify and change the character of modern naval warfare, it is surprising that none of the vessels built during or since that period are equal to those built before it. Our twenty-seven double-enders were costly failures, and the Government has wisely sold as many of them as it could find purchasers for, while the machinery has been taken out of the rest and the hulls have been used for coal barges or some such purpose. So too, the light-draught monitors, about twenty in number, which are still borne on the Navy Register, although practical failures, might as well be sold for old iron. Even the more pretentious cruisers, like the Madawaska (now the Tennessee) and the Wampanoag (now the Florida), will need to be extensively altered before they can be well suited for use as war vessels. Several of these were built of white instead of live oak, and could not, therefore, be expected to last very long. In fact the vessels built during the war may be generally classed as nondescripts, or as experiments which did not prove successful. A ship of war must fulfill a number of conditions, none of which can be slighted with impunity. It must carry a sufficient battery, must have good accommodations for the crew, must have abundant room for stores of all kinds as well as coal, and must be so rigged as to make good speed under sail, even though supplied with steam as an auxiliary. An experiment was made when Mr Isherwood was at the head of the Steam Bureau of building a number of fast cruisers, which were to be of the Alabama type, and for capturing such adversaries as depended, not on heavy batteries, but on escaping from a conflict with their superiors in strength. These new vessels had powerful engines and developed a respectable rate of speed, but their machinery occupied so much space that little was left for berthing the men or even for storing provisions. The highest speed they attained was about seventeen knots, and yet Admiral Dupont had done as well in the Minnesota years before, when that vessel was his flag ship in China.

But we need not further allude to the mistakes of naval constructors, for there yet remain many vessels in our navy of which we may well be proud, and which are fitted to make our flag honored wherever they may serve it. When we built the Merrimac, the Colorado, the Minnesota, the Wabash and other frigates of that class they excited the admiration of the world, and England ever prompt to copy improvements in naval architecture endeavored to copy their models. They combined all the improvements of [illegible] and [illegible] power, and stowing of the crew and supplies they have never been excelled, while they attained excellent speed by the use of sails and a screw propeller, which could be triced up when found unnecessary. Our sloops-of-war of the Lancaster class were also very fine specimens of their grade, while the eleven inch pivot guns they carried forward and aft made their battery unusually formidable. [illegible] vessels, although not fitted with absolutely full steam power, could [illegible] an average of nine knots an hour with a consumption of twenty four tons of coal a day. The Iroquois class of smaller sloops were also weatherly and fast ships of their kind, and were consequently of great value.

The classes of vessels just enumerated formed the best part of our naval service before the war, and most of them can again be made available. Vessels like the Madawaska require, it is true, many changes in their rigging and internal arrangement, but with proper alterations they can be used to advantage. It is generally conceded that our navy is not in such a state as that of a first-rate power such as the United States should be, but if the necessary supplies can be authorized and the enlistment of the required number of men be ordered it will not be long before we shall have afloat and in commission a sufficient number of vessels to support the dignity of the United States in every quarter of the globe.

FRIDAY MORNING AUGUST 5 1870

Return of Senator Williams

No one has ever received a more cordial greeting in Oregon than has been accorded to Senator Williams on the occasion of his present return. In this his own city, where, from the manner in which his enemies conducted the recent political campaign, his acts in the Senate were most searchingly scrutinized and least understood, he receives an endorsement in the election of which any one might justly feel proud, and the welcome with which he has been met on his return to his home is another testimonial that the course he has pursued and the zeal and ability he has manifested in behalf of the interests of the State and city have the approbation of our people.

That his acts, especially those which refer to the railway system and internal development of Oregon, would have received the unqualified approval of the people in many counties which elected Democrats to the Legislature, if the whole matter had been understood as well throughout the State as it was understood here, does not admit a doubt. Since the election in June the whole subject has become as clear to the people as the sun at noonday. Already the course of Senator Williams on railroad matters, which the Democrats condemned before the election, has been vindicated by the public judgment. On the main point upon which they made their fight against him he stands approved in the popular mind, and so strong is the position to which he committed himself, but for which his political enemies censured him prior to the election, that it is now conceded even by themselves that no Democrat can be elected Senator who will not pledge himself to use all his endeavors to carry out the measures in relation to our railway system which Senator Williams has inaugurated. That affairs should so soon have come into this shape is a high compliment to his good judgment in having taken the course which his enemies but a short time ago so vehemently denounced and opposed. This is proof enough that the people are with him on those measures which most vitally affect the well-being and prosperity of the State. And if the election had taken place at a time when the whole subject were as fully comprehended as now, there would be no question about the result. Not a member could now be elected south of the Wallamet valley against the policy which the Democratic party made war upon in the late campaign.

But the people in the southern counties have seen this too late. They suffered themselves to be misled by the common clap-trap about the Chinaman, and about Federal taxes—though the whole amount of Federal taxes paid by them would not half meet the cost of supplying them with mails,—and neglected their really important and vital interests. In all probability they have thrown away all chances of obtaining railway connections. When Senator Williams goes out of office the Humboldt branch bill will pass in accordance with the plan advocated by the Herald and the Democratic party before the election. No Democratic Senator can secure this grant, since the whole influence of the Pacific coast in Congress, when Williams goes out, will be against it. The southern counties have therefore pretty effectually settled the railroad question, so far as that question concerns them. But the course of Williams is vindicated, and even the Herald has virtually admitted that he was in the right, by arguing that a Democratic Senator can carry out what Williams has begun.

During the time he has been a representative of Oregon at Washington, Senator Williams has done his full share to give our State an honorable standing, and to make it known and respected. No one can say that he has not been true at all times to the principles of the party that elected him. During many [illegible] political vicissitudes, when other men often wavered, he has always [illegible]. His influence even his enemies acknowledge, and his services to the State none can question. Although he is soon to go out of office he is right in his observation that he does not go out "discarded by his own party"—a fate that has overtaken every one of his Democratic predecessors.

Arrival of Gen Canby

This officer, who made a most honorable record during the war for the Union, and who since the war has given further proofs of his good judgment and fidelity to important trusts in commands at the South during the period of reconstruction, has arrived among us, and will assume command of the Department of the Columbia. We doubt not he will receive from our people the consideration due to him as a soldier and a gentleman. His family comes with him. The General will be welcomed by the people of this Department, however much they may regret the departure of General Crook, who has been here for some years, and who has become very widely and favorably known.

As Mr Congressman Smith has now returned to Oregon, and as it is understood that he is a candidate for the United States Senate, we hope he will lose no time in repairing to Southern Oregon to make speeches on the railroad interests of that section! What could be so proper as two or three speeches from him, conceived and uttered in the spirit of those letters on that subject which he sent here just before the election, the tendency of which was to show that Southern Oregon ought to have no railroad facilities or connections? A gentleman so candid as Mr Smith ought by all means to be consistent and go down there and argue with the people in favor of a policy which would forever cut them off from all hopes of a railroad.

Already one of those consequences of the European war that are unfortunate for this country, is becoming apparent. The immigration of Germans is rapidly diminishing. Hamburg, Bremen and other great centers of emigration to America are now blockaded by French squadrons, and the arrivals of Germans at New York are becoming comparatively few. The New York Times of the 22d July notices this fact, and says that "Castle Garden, the Mecca of foreigners, no longer echoes to the tread of the hosts of German immigrants that for so many years have been arriving there."

Now that ex Senator Stark has actually arrived, and that the danger of his putting in an appearance as a candidate for the Senate is apparent to the Kelly men, they should lose no time in preparing those affidavits declaring that they never will support him, and that they cannot be "bought" to vote for a man who don't help the party to fight its battles, but who appears on the field after the victory is won to claim the richest of the spoils.

The War from a French Standpoint

A remarkable series of articles by the French publicist M. Cherbuliez appeared some months ago in a leading Paris journal, in which an exhaustive exposition of Prussian policy was given from a French standpoint. Copious extracts from these articles, translated into English, are presented in a prominent journal of New York. They go far to explain the animating motives of the present war as interpreted by a leader of the highest order of public opinion in France. At the outset, the writer says, Austria was completely humiliated, that she had to submit to treat with the conqueror for herself alone. Despite her engagements she was unable to stipulate for her Allies and was compelled to leave them at the discretion of Prussia. Each of the Southern States had accordingly to send a Minister to Nikolsburg, and once there Prussia took delight in keeping these disquieted suppliants in suspense, in alarming and disgusting them, in making them feel the weight of her victories and her pardons. Finally she bound them to her by a secret treaty by which the contracting parties mutually guaranteed the independence of their respective territories and engaged when occasion should arise to unite their forces under the supreme command of the King of Prussia. This, the writer shows, was a ground of complaint for France. We quote:

> Prussia had concluded an offensive and defensive alliance with the Governments of the South. Although she did not deceive herself upon the practical utility of this alliance she was extremely ready to lay down the principle that South Germany is not a neutral territory, and to cut short the illusions that might have been cherished on that score. She said in effect to the Suabians and to the Bavarians, in concluding the contract with them: "Keep yourself within bounds, and leave to Switzerland her militia. Europe has relieved her from taking part in the armed disputes of the Great Powers. It is a security and a privilege to which you cannot lay claim. Every time that I go to war for the sake of Germany you will be at my back."

Of the consequences of the treaty of Prague he writes in this graphic style:

> Strange result of a treaty of peace! The pens which had signed it were no sooner dry than all the Powers of Europe began to occupy themselves with improving their fire arms and increasing the number of their bayonets. On one hand it was said: "We have our hands full, we can wait. Let us meanwhile abstain from anything that might be construed into a provocation. Let us profit by our victory without appearing to abuse it, and be as moderate and as supple for anything that may be alleged against us as if we considered such merely as half grievances." On the other hand, it was said: "We will not draw the sword until the offense is worthy of the occasion. Let us shut our eyes to the lack of execution of certain articles, to stolid and secret encroachments, to wrong interpretations which we cannot pardon, but which may in time provoke a favorable utterance of public opinion. Although we are resolved to ignore nothing, it suits us for the present to allow our bill of injustice to grow silently. If it is ever filled up, we shall make the appropriate resolution." It is thus that peace has been maintained since 1866—by putting a good face upon things, but in watching each other, fully armed—a precarious sort of peace that was at the mercy of the slightest imprudence.

He argues next that the treaty of Prague came too soon, that the war which it terminated was too short, that the belligerents had not time to obtain a true measure of each others strength, and that by an extraordinary conjunction of favorable circumstances Prussia gained her point too easily, and that, by too facile victories, her spirits were unduly inflated and unduly prone to fresh enterprises. "It follows," says the writer, "that the conquerors, dazzled by the rapidity of their good fortune, abandon themselves to an immeasurable ambition, flattering themselves that henceforth nothing is impossible for them." The aims of Prussia are thus defined:

> To found in the North of Germany a great European Power, to extend their limits as far as their armies could extend, to take from the south all that could be seized in order to assure their safety from behind, and in order to reduce that portion of the Empire which had been left to the dominion of Austria, and on the other side to conquer by gradual steps all the shore-line of the Baltic, and to press with all their might toward the North Sea, because the sea is the highway of the world, and because there is no Great Power without shipping, such was the end which the Hohenzollerns set themselves to accomplish, and such is what they have attained.
>
> Unfortunately Prussia had no sooner finished one task than she set herself to the accomplishment of another. Not content with building up Prussia at the expense of Germany, she reserves the right of building up Germany at the expense of the peace of Europe. Prussia plays two different parts, and plays them with marvelous success. She is at the same moment one of the Five Great Powers and a German State. In her character of Great Power she is cosmopolitan, questions of origin and of race affect her [illegible] Poles and Danes are alike good for extension of territory, she has no prejudices, as she has well shown in her alliance with Italy against Austria. In her character of a German State she is animated by entirely different sentiments, she has the true German fibre, the national idea is dear to her. She cannot resign herself to remain forever separated from her brothers of the south. Her heart would bleed were Germany compelled to an eternal division. * * North of the Main a close union has been realized, and in drawing it every year closer the effort is made to cement it into one grand uniform monarchy, by means of a constitution with a sliding knot which will soon make short work of the autonomy which is left to the smaller States.
> The treaty of Prague could reassure no one. From the day following that of its signature it was seen that if it was for one party a definite settlement of accounts, the other considered it as the way bill of their ambition, and that the only question which was agitated in Prussia was whether a halt should be made at that limit, or if the document should be thrown into the fire. The inevitable consequence of false solutions is to engender false situations, and that is precisely the position of Europe with regard to the affairs of Germany. Prussia wants everything, and finds reasons for doing so. In support of her pretensions, she invokes now the old rights and now the new, without fear of contradicting herself. Thus the peace of Prague is not only a source of anxiety and alarm, but it has created much confusion both of minds and ideas. It is impossible to grapple with an adversary who declines all argument. We can only live from day to day waiting upon events, and promising to regulate our conduct according to circumstances. Those are to-day mistresses of Europe. May it please God that their reign may be peaceful and benign!

The writer argues, and with great skill and force, that the existence of Austria is of vital interest to Europe and especially to France. And he argues that if Austria is to maintain her position she cannot afford to see the south of Germany become a Prussian province.

> When we seek self preservation we do not content ourselves with staying at home and closing the door. The frontiers of a country must not be confounded with the natural line of defense; it is not enough to guard the spot itself, the approaches must also be protected. Bavaria and Wurtemberg are the approaches to Austria, and her line of defense is on the Main. The day when Munich shall be a Prussian city, Bohemia and the Tyrol are lost, and Vienna will no longer belong to the Empire.

Hence we see the reason why France manifests so much interest in the affairs of Germany. "France," says this writer with strong emphasis, "knows that whoever menaces Austria menaces herself." The whole argument is summed up in this brief paragraph:

> When it becomes a question of giving up the middle of Europe to an ambition at once obscure, tortuous and sophistical, which refuses any alliance, which takes no pains to reassure any one, and whose dream is perhaps to extend itself from the Baltic to the Adriatic, then that is what the good sense of the French nation cannot admit of.

Here then are the grounds on which France has declared war. The New York Times thus comments on the above: "When the most intellectual class of French politicians take the ground of opposition to Prussian aggrandizement being a matter of national necessity, [illegible] easier to understand the intense vigor of the war feeling [illegible], where memories of national victories are more strongly rooted, and where dreams of territorial expansion are but [illegible] by a perception of the results. It is impossible to read the extracts we give without being struck with the keenness of political perception which [illegible] four months ago the relations between France and Germany and the [illegible] which they involved for the peace of Europe, as completely as if they had been written a week ago."

Nice State of Affairs

At the recent Democratic primary election in San Francisco more votes were cast in several of the wards than the aggregate vote of both parties in the last municipal election. This fact was bitterly complained of by many of the defeated candidates, and the County Committee met on the 28th ult to examine the returns. Protests were received from almost every ward against their correctness, and charges of fraud were made in an excited and violent manner. The Chronicle comments on this state of affairs as follows:

> It will be seen that the charges of fraud, corruption, illegal voting and "repeating" are very numerous, affecting the result in almost every election precinct in the city. These charges are made by Democrats against Democrats, and, if true, show a condition of affairs that must entirely destroy public confidence in the new County Committee and the Nominating Convention. The singular spectacle is presented of a party dividing against itself and with singulary unanimity making charges and counter charges which must damn them in the estimation of honest citizens of both parties. The Democratic party has frequently been charged with frauds at general elections, but the party organs have indignantly spurned the insinuation and retorted upon their opponents. It would seem, according to party ethics, that while fraud might be sanctioned where any enemy's defeat was to be compassed, yet the principle of "honor among thieves" would require that they should not cheat one another. And yet such is the record presented, and which will continue to stare the harmonious Democracy in the face. Every citizen who has the welfare of the city at heart should read the protests of the contesting Democrats and then ask himself "Is this party fit to be entrusted with the government of our affairs?"

The Late French Minister

There appears to have been a great difference of opinion at Washington as to the cause which led Prevost Paradol, the late French Minister, to commit suicide. The fact that he purchased a pistol on the day previous, shows that the suicide had been premeditated and was not the result of a sudden impulse. One of the foreign Ministers gives a very probable surmise as to the cause which prompted him to take his own life. He says:

> He left Paris under highly unfortunate circumstances. His friends had become seriously estranged from him on account of his political course, which until of late had been in warm opposition to the Emperor. He had as bosom friends such men as Thiers and Favre, whose antagonism to the war was such as to draw upon them the open hostility of the French populace, and this latter fact, announced to him at the same time as the formal declaration of war against Prussia, had the effect of arousing his sensitive nature to the highest pitch of excitement. A number of causes of a similar nature added to the attrition of his mental system, until the overstrained cords snapped asunder, and he sought relief in suicide.

RECEPTION OF SENATOR WILLIAMS

[illegible]

The Committee appointed to receive Senator Williams and [illegible] who had [illegible] Wednesday morning on board the [illegible] which had been tendered for the occasion by the O S N Co. As has been already announced the Oriflamme was not met as had been expected and the party thereupon proceeded down the river with the intention of going as far as Astoria, unless the steamship should be met. The absence from the city of a party [illegible] business and [illegible] of more than a few hours [illegible] the extension of [illegible] the trip [illegible] It was however [illegible] of the passengers [illegible] The steamer landed at [illegible] St. Helens and the passengers [illegible] the steamer [illegible] on shore and [illegible] being just [illegible] The expedition finally extended to Rainier, where a dispatch was sent back to announce that the steamer need not be expected that night, and hence nearly to Cathlamet, where the [illegible] was met [illegible] H Williams [illegible] and daughter [illegible] and several [illegible] the meeting of the two steamers [illegible] together and [illegible] the Oriflamme with the [illegible] of her passengers [illegible] further down [illegible] The formal reception of Senator Williams [illegible] place on the deck of the California after his personal friends and acquaintances had greeted him.

[illegible] TO SENATOR WILLIAMS

Dr [illegible] the chairman of the reception committee, addressing the Senator, said:

Senator [illegible]: As Chairman of the Committee of Reception it becomes my pleasant duty to welcome you back "where rolls the Oregon and hears no sound save its own dashings."

This welcome to you is extended by a majority of the citizens of our State in consideration of the successful and able manner in which you have represented the interests [illegible]

We appreciate your patriotism and statesmanship, which have secured you a front rank in that body where Webster, Clay and Calhoun were distinguished.

The smoke of our late political battle has but just disappeared, and your own county proved its appreciation of your efforts in signally defeating and condemning the course of certain traitor friends, who like Judas of old, were ready and willing to sell you out, [illegible] like they have drawn themselves into their shells and will be heard of no more, while you, Sir, will live in the affections of the Oregon people and have the satisfaction of knowing that their verdict is that you have been their true and faithful servant.

Again, Sir, allow us to bid you welcome, thrice welcome home.

SENATOR WILLIAMS' RESPONSE

Dr [illegible] and Gentlemen—I can do but little more than to express to you my profound acknowledgment for the very kind and flattering manner in which you have been pleased to notice my arrival in Oregon. I experience in this meeting a sense of double satisfaction, not only from the consciousness of having escaped the perils of a long journey by land and sea, but also from the consciousness that I have returned to friends and home. I hasten to express my deep and lasting gratitude for all the manifestations of kindness that I have received at your hands, and particularly for those acts of friendship performed by you in the late political campaign, in which my official course was the subject of excited and bitter controversy. I do not know that I shall ever have an opportunity to repay this debt of gratitude, but your generous acts are written upon the tablets of my memory and

"Time their impressions will deeper make
As streams their channels deeper wear."

I congratulate you upon the prospects of our State. Nothing has occurred in its history more remarkable than its rapid progress in public estimation within the last two or three years. Go where you will in the East and you will find people eagerly enquiring about the climate, resources and advantages of Oregon. This State is now as well known as California, and Portland is spoken of as a city upon the Pacific coast as well as San Francisco. Considerable discussion has lately taken place in Congress about Oregon affairs, and it may be that this has conduced to turn public attention to our State.

I may mention that the only two bills that have [illegible] both branches of Congress at the late session to aid in the construction of railroads concerning the State of Oregon. The Astoria, McMinnville and Portland Bill is the only one of a local nature out of seventy five or one hundred pending that has become a law, and the bill extending the grant to the Northern Pacific road is another, which makes Portland one of the points on its main line. Pacific coast dispatches published in the East have frequently contained allusions to the construction of the Oregon and California railroad, and these have arrested public attention, and in consequence of the prominence which our State in this and other ways has attained, a tide of population has commenced to flow to our borders, which will no doubt continue to swell till it adds tens and hundreds of thousands to our people.

I have just come from a long and laborious session of Congress, which has passed many important, and in my judgment, beneficial measures. I will mention the currency bill, which adds fifty four millions to the currency of the country, intended for the benefit of the Western and Southern States, and which also provides for banking upon a coin basis, so that the people of the Pacific States may be furnished with a paper circulation more convenient, and at the same time equivalent to and convertible into coin.

Provisions have also been made for refunding the public debt at a lower rate of interest, and if the war in Europe does not prevent, I have little doubt that under these provisions the interest on the public debt may be reduced eighteen or twenty millions per annum, which is a more equitable adjustment than our Democratic party proposed in the late canvass.

An army bill has been passed which it is said will in [illegible] reduce the expenses of the army, and though much has been said about military rule by the Republicans, I say that finding an army of a million of men at the close of the rebellion they have reduced it to thirty thousand, so that the expense of the military department of the Government will be [illegible] than it was before the war.

Congress has also passed a bill reducing the taxes seventy six millions [illegible] that for the ensuing fiscal year the people will be required to pay seventy six millions of dollars taxes less than they paid during the last fiscal year.

Last but not least, Congress has completed the work of reconstruction, and every one of the eleven States that [illegible] to destroy the Union is fully restored. [illegible] is dead, slavery is abolished, [illegible] saved, and made perpetual upon the true principles of Republican government [illegible] in Congress may go [illegible] with confidence [illegible]

I wish to say a single word in behalf of the present administration. Whatever criticisms may be passed upon [illegible] must admit that he has [illegible] a careful, prudent and economical chief magistrate. Honesty, simplicity and economy have characterized his administration. [illegible] hundred millions of the public debt [illegible] paid since he became President, and during fifteen months of his administration sixty [illegible] more of revenue have been collected than were collected in the last fifteen months of the administration of Johnson.

Reference has been made by you [illegible] to the late election [illegible] so far as that is concerned [illegible] false and [illegible] were [illegible] the late campaign in this State, but having served the purpose [illegible] I am sure, with the [illegible] party warfare [illegible] oblivion [illegible] every man who goes into politics [illegible] prepared [illegible] therefore I do not [illegible] want of [illegible] I believe I have [illegible] those by whom [illegible] Whatever [illegible] may have been [illegible] I may say without egotism that I have [illegible] Senate.

Let the dead past bury its dead. [illegible] ours is with the future. Let us close up our ranks, let us cultivate union and harmony, let us stand fearlessly by those principles that have safely carried us through so many encounters, and though adversity may overcome us for a time we shall rise again.

Allow me, gentlemen, in conclusion, to express to you once more my thanks for your many acts of friendship and especially for the honor of this too flattering and generous reception.

It had been intended to give a formal civic re[illegible] ion and Commission.

A fearful responsibility rests upon those charged with the care of children. A careless neglect in the timely use of a well known safe and certain remedy for that most common and dangerous complaint called croup should subject the party to the severest censure when it is well known that a bottle of NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP would have warded off the attack. Mothers and nurses, KEEP IT BY YOUR BEDSIDE, and use it without fear upon the first symptom and with a certainty of immediate relief.

CITY.

RECEPTION OF SENATOR WILLIAMS

GOING DOWN THE RIVER—A [illegible] REST OF [illegible] STAND FOR HIS ONES—AN [illegible] UNRESTRICTED TRIP—THE ARRIVAL [illegible] HONORS TO OTHER DISTINGUISHED PERSONS

The Committee appointed to receive Senator Williams and Gen Canby with about two hundred guests started down the river at half past [illegible] Wednesday morning on board the Cascade, which had been tendered for the occasion by the O S N Co. As has been already announced, the Oriflamme was not met as had been expected and the party therefore proceeded down the river with the intention of going as far as Astoria unless the steamer should be sooner met. Very few of the party had contemplated an absence from the city of more than a few hours and in a business and domestic point of view therefore the extension of the trip into the afternoon began to have to some of the passengers, a serious look. It was however concluded to go on. The steamer landed at St Helens, and the passengers pretty generally went ashore and obtained lunch, the steamer's commissary stores on board being just equal to regular service. The expedition finally arrived at Rainier whence a dispatch was forwarded to announce that the steamer need not be expected that night and thence nearly to Cathlamet where the propeller California was met, having on board Senator Geo H Williams, Mr Holladay and his son in law and daughter, the Count and Countess de Pourtales and several other and minor guests. Upon the meeting of the two steamers, they were lashed together and headed for Portland, the Oriflamme with the rest of her passengers being in sight further down the river. The formal reception of Senator Williams took place on the deck of the California, where his personal friends and acquaintances had greeted him.

RECEPTION ADDRESS TO SENATOR WILLIAMS.

Hon J. M. Lorgan, the chairman of the reception committee, addressing the Senator, said:

Senator Williams: As Chairman of the Committee of Reception it becomes my pleasant duty to welcome you back "where rolls the Oregon and hears no sound save its own dashings." The welcome to you is extended by a majority of the citizens of our State in consideration of the faithful and able manner in which you have guarded their interests. It is your patriotism and statesmanship which have secured you a front rank in that body where Webster Clay and Calhoun were distinguished. The results of our late political battle has but [illegible] proved, and your own county proved the wisdom of your efforts in signally defeating and exposing the course of certain traitors [illegible] who like Judas of old, were ready and willing to sell you out—turtle-like they have drawn themselves into their shells and will be forgotten, while you Sir, will live in the hearts of the Oregon people and have the satisfaction of knowing that their verdict is that you are their true and faithful servant. Again, Sir, allow us to bid you welcome, thrice welcome.

SENATOR WILLIAMS' RESPONSE.

Mr President and Gentlemen—I can do but little more than express to you my profound sense of gratitude for the very kind and flattering manner in which you have been pleased to notice my return to Oregon. I experience in this meeting a double satisfaction, not only from the sense of having escaped the perils of a journey by land and sea but also from the consciousness that I have returned to friends and [illegible] to express my deep and lasting sense of all the manifestations of kindness I have received at your hands, and particularly for those acts of friendship performed by you in the late political campaign in which my official conduct was the subject of excited and bitter controversy. I do not know that I shall ever be able [illegible] to repay this debt of gratitude. Your generous acts are written upon the [illegible] of my memory and [illegible] will deeper make [illegible] deeper wear.

I congratulate you upon the prospects of our State. Nothing has occurred in its history more gratifying than its rapid progress in public estimation within the last two or three years. Go where you will in the East and you will find people inquiring about the climate, resources and advantages of Oregon. This State is now ranked with California, and Portland is spoken of already upon the Pacific coast as well as [illegible]. Considerable discussion has lately taken place in Congress about Oregon affairs, and I think this has conduced to turn public attention to our State.

You will see that the only two bills that have passed both branches of Congress at the late session to aid in the construction of railroads concern the State of Oregon. The Astoria, McMinnville and Salem Bill is the only one of a local nature out of seventy five or one hundred pending that became a law, and the bill extending the time to the Northern Pacific road is another, which makes Portland one of the points on its main line. The late coast dispatches, published in the East have frequently contained allusions to the conflict of the Oregon and California railroad, which have arrested public attention and in consequence of the prominence which our State in various ways has attained a tide of population has commenced to flow to our borders which will doubtless continue to swell till it adds tens and tens of thousands to our people.

I have just come from a long and laborious session of Congress, which has passed many important and in my judgment, beneficial measures. I will mention the currency bill, which adds fifty four millions to the currency of the country, fixed for the benefit of the Western and Southern States, and which also provides for banking upon a coin basis so that the people of those States may be furnished with a paper currency convenient and at the same time safe and convertible into coin. Provisions have also been made for refunding the national debt at a lower rate of interest, and if the state of Europe does not prevent I have little doubt that under these provisions the interest on the public debt may be reduced eighteen or twenty millions per annum which is a more equitable adjustment than the Democratic party proposed in the late canvass.

An army bill has been passed which it is said will largely reduce the expenses of the army and though much has been said about military rule by the [illegible], I say that finding an army of a million of men at the close of the rebellion it has been reduced to thirty thousand so that the expense of the military department of the Government will be little more than it was before the war.

Congress has also passed a bill reducing the taxes twenty-six millions so that for the ensuing year the people will be required to pay [illegible] millions of dollars taxes less than they paid during the last fiscal year.

Last, but not least, Congress has completed the work of reconstruction, and every one of the States that combined to destroy the Union has been restored. Secession is dead—slavery is dead. The Union is saved and made perpetual upon the true principles of Republican government. Is not this a record upon which the majority in Congress may go back with confidence to their constituents?

I will say a single word in behalf of the present administration. Whatever criticism may be passed upon President Grant, all candid men must admit that he has made a careful prudent [illegible] chief magistrate. Honesty simplicity and economy have characterized his administration. More than one hundred millions of the public debt have been paid since he became President, and during fifteen months of his administration sixty five millions more of revenue have been collected than were collected in the last fifteen months of the administration of Johnson.

Reference has been made by you sir to the late election. I am disposed so far as that is concerned, to "let bygones be bygones." Many hard and malicious things were said about me in the campaign in this State but having answered their purpose they will pass I am sure with all the slang and filth of party warfare into oblivion and be forgotten. Every man who goes into political life must be prepared for its vicissitudes. I have a "heart for any fate" in politics and I do not complain or repine over our want of success. I am proud in the belief that I have not been discarded by my political friends and I believe I have not betrayed the principles of those by whom I was elected. Whatever my errors may have been I think I may say without boasting, that I have not humiliated Oregon in the Senate.

"Let the dead past bury its dead." Our business is with the future. Let us close up our ranks, let us cultivate union and harmony, let us stand firmly by those principles that have carried us through so many encounters, and though defeat may overcome us for a time, we shall triumph again.

Allow me gentlemen, in conclusion, to express once more my thanks for your many acts of friendship, and especially for the honor of this generous reception.

[illegible] wanted to give a formal civic reception to Gen Canby but his wife being ill he declined the courtesy.

THE TRIP UP THE RIVER.

The two steamships and the Cascade steamed up the river till darkness came on when the California cast anchor in the channel just above Rainier and the others lay alongside so that the passengers of each were able to communicate freely with those on the other two. The Cascade party were invited by Mr Holladay to take dinner on board the California, which fortunately for all concerned had ample supplies of provisions. There were however so many of them that the dining hall was kept occupied till nearly midnight. The berths of the California were also placed at the disposal of the party, very nearly all of whom secured either berths, lounges or easy chairs so that there were but few who did not pass the night quite comfortably. At daylight the steamers were again put in motion, Mr Holladay and the notables being on board the California. The Cascade ran up to St Helens and stopped to give her passengers a chance for breakfast. The most of them found something to eat though in some cases it could scarcely be called breakfast. The gentlemen connected with the O S N Co's office are indebted to Mr J [illegible] Ladd for an invitation to his own table and an excellent morning meal.

THE ARRIVAL.

Soon after getting into the Willamette river the Cascade ran alongside the California and took on board Senator Williams as the special guest of the Committee and citizens all the others remaining on board the California. As the steamers came up to the wharf a military salute was fired from the east bank of the river in honor of Gen Canby. The Oriflamme and California came up together—the first landing at the steamship dock the other at the O S N Co's wharf at each of which places an immense crowd was very soon congregated. Senator Williams with the Committee came off and entering a hack drove to the St Charles Hotel where the Senator will remain for the present.

At the steamship dock there was a tremendous jam till the distinguished passengers came ashore. The Count and Countess de Pourtales of whom the crowd were more anxious to get a sight than any of the others, quietly entered a carriage with Mr Holladay and drove at once to that gentleman's residence. When Messrs Smith and Stark came ashore there were a few cheers from the Democrats who had come down to receive them. They were taken in an open carriage also to the St Charles Hotel and then all but the usual crowd of porters dray and hack men dispersed.

HONORS TO THE DISTINGUISHED ARRIVALS.

At all points along the river during the return trip the distinguished people on board the steamers were greeted by the display of flags, cheers at the landings, the dipping of flags on vessels in the river, blowing of whistles by steamers passed, and other demonstrations. The vessels in port were gaily decked with banners in honor of the occasion. Taken altogether, the reception proved quite an event in the not uneventful life of our metropolis.

SENATOR WILLIAMS SERENADED

AN IMMENSE CROWD—SPEECH BY SENATOR WILLIAMS

At a few minutes before 9 o'clock last evening the Aurora Band commenced playing at the American Exchange Hotel and at 9 heading the immense crowd gathered marched up Front street to the St Charles where Senator Williams and wife have rooms. After a stirring air or two by the band Senator Williams appeared escorted by Mayor [illegible] and [illegible] mounting a temporary stand which had been erected in the street in front of the main entrance, was greeted by three cheers by the audience.

Mr Williams in acknowledging the compliment thus paid him said that owing to a journey so long and tedious, his voice was much worn out and really almost lost. He hoped therefore to be excused from making an extended speech. He would however embrace the opportunity to cordially thank not only the citizens who had united in this demonstration but the people of Portland and Oregon who in the past had given him so many testimonials of their esteem and confidence.

He was aware that he had not in his Senatorial career been able to please all the people of Oregon. Where there were rival and conflicting interests as there had been especially in regard to certain railroad matters it was simply an impossibility to so act that all should be satisfied. But he had not tried to be the representative of any particular section of the State nor of any particular town interest corporation or individual. His uniform effort had been to promote by all legislation in Congress the best interests of the whole State. He was aware that in so doing he had deeply offended some individuals and had failed to satisfy others but he was content with the consciousness of having labored honestly and earnestly for the greatest good to the greatest number, and he was willing to submit the rectitude of his motives to the consideration and judgment of all fair minded men.

He had felt himself permitted to act as the special representative of the city of Portland though most all of his pecuniary interests were here but he had always watched with jealous care the growing importance of the city and the natural tendency of great agencies in building up cities to center here. He believed that the foreshadowing of coming events warranted him in predicting for Portland the foremost position among all the possible cities of the great Northwest. There could never be a successful rival anywhere north of San Francisco while Portland may yet become a formidable rival to that city. No city on the coast seemed to him to be the objective point of so many great railroads and carrying trades. In all these contemplated enterprises he had during his Senatorial career taken a deep and active interest and had been permitted to assist in bringing them forward.

Among the other responsibilities which had fallen upon him as a member of Congress was the settlement of the great national questions growing out of the late rebellion which had not yet come to an end at the time of his election. Without any disposition to boast he would say that he framed the bill since known as the Military reconstruction bill under which and its amendments all of the eleven States in rebellion have been restored to their natural positions in the Federal Union. He did not believe that the course he had thought it right to pursue in the matters of reconstruction has now the opposition or condemnation of any considerable number of the people.

In allusion to the late election in this State he said that he had not thought it possible that the people of Oregon were a majority of them in favor of repudiation, as would seem to the people of other States from the result of the election, nor could he yet believe that there are any great numbers favorable to the commission of acts of bad faith to the Government and people such as were indicated and recommended by the late State Democratic platform. And yet the issues of repudiation and kindred measures had seemed to be the questions most involved up to a time within a few days of the last election. It was a matter of astonishment to him and to many others that all legitimate issues of the campaign had been almost at the last moment entirely crowded out of sight by the lesser question as to whether his conduct in regard to certain railroad matters had been right or wrong.

Mr Williams then proceeded at some length to explain certain matters connected with railroad legislation in Congress and to vindicate himself from the aspersions which have been cast so plentifully upon his motives by certain enemies in Oregon. His remarks in this connection were substantially in accord with the facts as set forth heretofore at great length in this paper and in his letter published a few weeks since. We need not therefore to repeat them here even if we had time and space. His showing of the whole matter was most clear apparently entirely candid and truthful and we must believe fully satisfactory to all disinterested men in his audience.

He closed his speech by again thanking the people for the honor they had conferred by calling upon him in this manner, and as he retired the audience gave three hearty cheers and dispersed. Subsequently great numbers pressed into the hotel and personally welcomed the Senator to his home.

Passengers from California.—The following is the steamship Oriflamme's list of passengers: Count and Countess Pourtales and servants, Hon J S Smith and family, H Thielsen and family, M Pendergast, Rev Father Prefontaine, H Hewett, Miss Blanche Gray and sister, Miss Julia Horner, E P Rogers, Mrs C Taylor and child, Jas W Thrift, L Lamy, Geo W Pittock, Mrs E A Pattie and children, D Dunn, W Woodhead, Gen Canby and wife, Col J W Sherburne and family, Lt Sears, U S A, Mrs A W Sweeny, J R Eastman, Rev H K Edson, O F Garrett, Mrs E G West and child, Mrs C Albright and child, Jas Meyer, Mrs J McGrew, Capt Pinnix, D Simpson, J H May, W Gundlack, C S Barron, Hon Judge Williams and wife, Benj Stark, Miss Dale Pray, A A Beam and family, Samuel Guthrie, L Tighlman, Jas Fraser, Wm Sanders, Miss B L Gird, Miss M Barton, H Durden and wife, H Perkins, Rev W A Findlay and wife, Prof W Gibbs, M Peterson and family, Sam Eves and wife, N Wentworth, J Gerry and wife, J McCabe, Col E D Baker, wife and mother, Lt H R Anderson and wife, L N Casaire, U S A, Miss M L Allen, W P Ewing, Dr F Hill, W H Miller and wife, Mrs A C Ripley, C H Fuller, E H Long, Mrs M Nash and sister, P McLaren and family, G H Wilson, J McGrew, F W Abberton, D Dolmas and 125 others.

A Case of Sunstroke.—We are informed that Col Geo H Belden, who is in charge of the railroad surveys for the west side road was the victim of sunstroke yesterday. While at work on the mountains near Slavin's place back of the Red House he suddenly became deathly sick and fell down but succeeded in a moment in getting into a sitting posture and then in getting upon his feet. An axeman some distance in advance looking round observed that something was wrong and hastened back. Mr Belden fell again but was taken a short distance to a stream where the workmen poured water on his head and applied other restorative means. After a while he so far recovered as to be brought in a buggy to the city and last evening he was reported much better.

Our Citizens certainly deserve credit for the energy they display to make the Oregon [illegible] Labor Exchange a success and benefit to the State as well as the immigrant coming to our State. Iron Steamships for America.

EX-SECRETARY SEWARD ON THE DECLINE OF AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Ex Secretary Seward has written the following letter to Hon. James S. Negley, member of Congress from Pennsylvania:

MY DEAR SIR: * * * It is easy enough to see how the United States has lost the control and profits of their foreign commerce. While we have been engaged in a civil war that taxed our energies and resources, and forced us to anticipate the contributions of posterity to save the national life, other commercial States whose good fortune it has been to remain at peace, have been taking advantage of the discovery that sailing vessels are being displaced by steamships, and that wooden vessels are giving place to iron ones.

Not merely France and Great Britain, but every other European State, is in a condition to build at once iron steamships cheaper than we can with our imperfectly developed mines and forests, and uninstructed and costly labor. Painful as the admission is, it must be made, that this misfortune, which so deeply affects our national pride, must continue until we shall be able, with or without the direct intervention of the Government, to build iron steamships as cheaply as they are now built in Europe.

Your speech, as well as all the reports you have submitted to me, show that this national power of building iron steamships as cheaply as European ones, cannot be obtained now without an actual and effective intervention by Congress. When we come to ask this intervention, we encounter a difficulty which an abundant experience ought to have taught us to foresee. All Congresses and all constituencies agree in the abstract proposition that the national navigation interest must be restored and re-established; but the several sectional or party interests represented in Congress insist that the cost of sacrifice necessary to be incurred shall be cast upon some other interest. The public land interest insists that the burden shall be devolved upon the commercial interest or the manufacturing interest, and for that reason would prefer subsidies from the national treasury. The internal tax-payers and the merchants would cast the burden on the manufacturing and mining interests, and the mining and manufacturing interests, struggling against foreign competition, refuse to assume it.

The object in view, in my judgment, is sufficiently important to justify its attainment through compromise of the several conflicting interests, or even at the cost of any one of them. Those interests seem to be disinclined to so patriotic a compromise at this moment, and each one of them seems strong enough to protect itself by defeating the policy proposed at its own expense. It was just in this way that the building of a Pacific railroad, which every one, from the beginning, admitted was necessary, was prevented and delayed 18 long years, until a paramount military necessity compelled Congress to authorize it to be built, not indeed in the wisest way, but in the only way found practicable at the time. The national mind does not sleep any more than the national necessities wear out. The national mind will will find out its want of a national navigation, and will compel its restoration through Congress.

But with all due deference to those who now sit in the legislative halls, I think that the responsibility will be devolved, not upon them, but upon a future Congress, or at least upon this Congress at a future session. To speak plainly, the popular mind in new elections will be susceptible to considerations of national interest, developments, and aggrandizement. What is wanted to fix and establish the patriotic and wise convictions at which you have arrived in the national mind?

In the election at which the present Congress was chosen it knew only the rights and felt only the passions and prejudices which were brought into activity by the rebellion. Slowly as it may seem to you that the national judgment discloses itself in its popular form, it is always in advance of Congress. Twenty years since, in accordance with the sentiment of the American people, I proposed to Congress to admit New Mexico as a free State into the American Union. It is only now that Congress seems about to reach the conclusion that what was then proposed is wise and right. How much agitation has not the project cost?

Come down, then, Mr. Negley, from your seat in the House of Representatives, among the people. Show them that their Government is wrong in maintaining hopeless and unworthy grudges against foreign nations in refusing to obtain and accept in a peaceful way, upon just terms, the extension of their commerce and the extension of the national jurisdiction throughout the American continent, the free acceptance of immigration without fear or apprehension from Europe and from Asia, with all the labor and skill, not to speak of the wealth which it may bring. Show them that a nation which understands its own capacity and its own noble principles of humanity is just as able, and will find it just as wise, to build its own steamships for foreign commerce as it is to build its own railroads for domestic traffic. Do this, my dear sir, and take my word for it that you will before long have a Congress that will not higgle about measures indispensable to the maintenance of the national prosperity, dignity and honor.

Wishing you abundant success in following the policy in which we both agree on the line which you have chosen and are so gallantly pursuing, I shall say nothing of what I am writing to you. At the same time I think it proper to reserve myself for activity in the line I have indicated, if you shall be unsuccessful in your efforts. May I not hope we may have an opportunity of conferring with each other on the subject?

I am, my dear sir, very faithfully your friend and obedient servant,

WILLIAM H. SEWARD.

A Child Falls Three Hundred Feet and Still Lives.

A Pittsburg paper gives the following almost incredible account of a child falling over a precipice three hundred feet high without being killed:

The victim of the accident is a little boy four years old, a child of Rev. James Crossman, pastor of the Evangelical Association chapel. At the time mentioned the little fellow was sitting, with some other boys a little older than himself, on one of the overhanging rocks of the bluff. At this point, as we have said, the bluff is at least three hundred feet high. At the base runs the track of the McConnelsville Railroad. One of the boys saw something lying at the foot of the rock on which he sat and told little Martin to pick it up for him. The child stooped over to do so, when he lost his balance and fell headlong over the precipice. The little fellow undoubtedly struck some shelving portions of rock between the top and the bottom, and so broke his descent somewhat, for the sheer fall must inevitably have killed him outright. These only prolonged the time of his descent a few seconds, however, and he struck, apparently head first, on the railroad track. As if this were not a terrible enough experience, the express train on the railroad came rushing toward the spot, and in a few seconds the senseless child would be crushed under its wheels. Fortunately a man who was working near, saw the child fall and saw also the new danger impending. At the risk of his own life he sprang upon the track, seized the little body and, taking it in his arms, pressed it as tightly as possible back against the face of the rock. He was not a second too soon, for he had scarcely got off the rails when the train passed, almost brushing his clothes as he hugged the rock. The danger past, attention was turned to the child and it was found that the frightful fall had not killed him, though he was bleeding and insensible. Quickly as possible he was carried to his father's residence and it was ascertained that no bones were broken. There were two or three ugly cuts on the head, and there were bruises on various parts of the body. But so far as now appears, the little patient is not dangerously hurt.

Gen. Butler's rigorous demands that the fishermen of his district must be protected, and that without any delay, have been responded to. Nipsic and the Guard, recently returned to New York from the Darien expedition, have been ordered to the fishing grounds, and the Frolic will remain in the Canadian waters under similar instruction.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Diamonds have recently increased in value seven or eight per cent.

It is said that the connecting link between animal and vegetable diet is hash.

A Boston saloon displays a card on which is "No religious discussions allowed here."

The city of Boston paid $23,700 for the relief of soldiers' families during the quarter ending June 30.

A thousand Springfield rifles were shipped recently, from the Springfield armory to Kentucky to arm the State troops.

Orders will be issued from the Postoffice Department, before the 1st of August, for the creation of 382 additional money-order offices. The total number will then be about 2,100.

The Secretary of the Treasury has appointed three female clerks to first-class clerkship, at a salary of $1,200, instead of $900. This is the beginning of the promotion of meritorious female clerks.

The first merchant vessel that ever displayed from her peak the flag of this republic is reported sunk in the harbor of Payta, Peru. She was built in 1782, bark rigged, about 300 tons, and called the Maria.

The relative positions of the central points in the European theater of war are as follows: Paris to Metz, 170 miles; Paris to Berlin, 500; Paris to Vienna, 550; Paris to London, 180; Paris to Strasburg, 225; Berlin to Vienna, 330; Berlin to London, 525.

France has 119 fortresses, of which 8 are of the first rank; Paris, Lyons, Strasbourg, Metz, Lille, Toulon, Brest and Cherbourg. The fortifications of Paris are stated to have cost $40,000,000, and up to 1868 there had been expended on Cherbourg $34,000,000.

On the 29th of September it will be one hundred years since Rev. George Whitefield preached in Exeter, N. H., the last sermon of his life, dying at Newburyport the day after. It is suggested that union religious services be held to commemorate the anniversary.

The colored men, not to be behind their white brethren in trades union matters have called a convention to consider their labor interests, to be held at Saratoga on August 17. They want the privilege of learning trades and a chance of entering industrial associations in common with other people.

Mr. Delano has settled the dispute about the canceling machines by deciding that the stamps must be so cut and mutilated as to render second use impossible, and that any machine which will do this effectually may be used. The effect of the decision will be to throw out any machine that does not perform effectually the work desired.

On the Sunday after the recent fire in Manchester, N. H., the pastor of the Hanover Street Church congratulated his congregation upon the providential change in the direction of the wind, when the fire was at its height, by which the church was saved. It appears, however, that this change in the wind blew the flames upon the Baptist church and caused its destruction, which suggests the query whether the latter Church regards it as providential.

The Young Men's Christian Association in Warren, Pa., has nothing to do. They resolved to visit the prisoners in the jail; but when they applied for admittance on their merciful errand, they found the jail was empty. They then resolved to relieve the distressed; but when they advertised for applicants for their charity none responded. The town has a population of 2,500 and seven churches. Grog shops are now unknown, and all the inhabitants are either Christians or church going people.

The dignity of Prussia in the present crisis, of which we read so much in American journals, exists more in imagination than in fact. The true explanation of the reticence of the Government of King William, mistaken for a dignified reserve, is found in the fact that Berlin, in a time like this, is almost isolated from telegraphic communication with the rest of the world. The news which we receive is Paris news, made up, the French Government and the gossip and inventions of the vast multitude of newspaper correspondents congregated in that city. Bismarck allows little to go out of Berlin, and what little he does permit filters through a very long wire before it reaches the cable stretching to our shores.

Representative J. F. Benjamin, of Missouri, has hit upon and put into practice an admirable plan to dispose of a cadetship within his gift. Refusing to select any candidate himself, he has placed the nomination to which his district is entitled in the hands of a committee of his constituents, who are to call together all the young men desirous of a West Point education, and examine them publicly as to their mental qualifications for the coveted honor and privilege. The young gentleman pronounced to be the most worthy by the examining committee will receive the cadetship to which Mr. Benjamin's district is entitled. This is a great improvement on the Whittemore method, and strongly commends itself to the attention of all Congressmen.
